in repty to a question by Mr. T. M. O'Beirne in regard to dredging, the Chairman said that soundings showed there was no going back in regard to the bar. The "Sandpiper" dredger bad been laid up since July, and if they were not going to use it it might be hired out.

The Engineer said that the Board could obtain £100.£150 a week net for the hire.

Mr. Scott said there was some doubt as to the reliability of that report, but if the Board were satisfied from an authoritative source that the bar was really not sifting up they should consider the hiring of the dredger.

The Engineer said that the soundings were

FRIDAY, MARCH 30, 1917.

Russia and Germany.

It is becoming more and more clear that not since the Bastille fell has an ficance than the Russian Revolution. There international effects of every national victory of liberalism over reaction are cumulative. In 1848-the "year of revolutions "-the flame of revolt, lit in Italy, swept throughout the Continent till nearly every throne in Europe rocked. So it is today. The contagion has spread from one extreme of Europe to the other-from Petrograd to Madrid. Suddenly we learn of grave events in Spain, suggested rather than revealed in a brief telegram, evidently censored severely, which announces the suspension of the constitutional guaranmore closely interested, however, in the effects of the Russian Revolution in Germany. There is a direct sequence of cause and effect between the Revolution and the speech of the Imperial German Chancellor yesterday. It is not extravagant to say that nothing in the whole ourse of the war has proved more disconerting to the German Government. The resolution which it has betrayed in the presence of it is the measure of its malaise. On March 14th, when the Revolution was an assured success, though the facts of it were not yet public property, Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg made an unexpected appearance in the Reichstag. A few days earlier the Prussian House of Peers had thrown out a bill making a trivial concession in the cause of political freedom. Count Yorck, the leader of the Conservative Party, had proclaimed that Prussia must be guarded from the danger o Parliamentary institutions. "We need militarism," he said, "far more than Par iamentarism," To this declaration the Imperial Chancellor, admitting in his speech that until that morning—the morning when authentic news of the Russian Revoution reached Berlin-he had no intention of speaking, delivered a vehement reply. He insisted that after the war there must be a reform of the Prussian franchise—the three-class electoral system which is the buttress of the Junkers, and has been re-cognised by the Social Democrats as the first obstacle in the path of pol cal progress. To withhold reform, said the Chancellor, would provoke "an internal convulsion whose compass no man could fore-the faintest understanding of his subject. The article is a reply to Mr. R. W. Livingstone's "Defence of Classical Education," which was reviewed recently in these columns. Mr. Wells says some things with which even the headmasters of the great public schools will now agree. Modern education is a many-sided thing, and be forced no longer on beys who have no aptitude for them. The teaching of these languages can be improved-is now being improved and humanised by the recent results of archæological research. Mr. Wells goes much further, however; he is an outand, next, a training in understanding. A of the hospital staff. good education gives a man "all that can be given him of what mankind has made out about thought and about its own nature and destiny." Mr. Wells says that a man can get all this while remaining absolutely ignorant of Greek and Latin. He proves his point to his own satisfaction by making an assumption which is as audacious as anything in his early stories. Art has nothing to say to taste in cigars. Beautiful writing may be great and ennobling, "but it is educational by reason of its thought and illumination, and not by reason of its beauty.'

Keats wrote-Beauty is truth truth beauty—that is all Ye know on earth, and all ye need to know. Mr. Wells would reject this dictum with event occurred of wider European signi- scientific scorn. He eliminates beauty from education as complacently as he would is nothing so infectious as the spirit of eliminate cavalry from modern warfare, freedom, and history teaches us that the and the rest, of course, is plain sailing. Everything is reduced to "a question of language, of medium," and, for all purposes of education, one language is as good as another. Plato and Tacitus convey their meaning, for purposes of "statement and discussion," as clearly in English as in Greek and Latin. "There are tears for things and mortal things touch the mind ' conveys the same fact as sunt lacrimae rerum et mentem mortalia tangunt. "Both Greek and Latin are, therefore, unnecessary to a complete liberal education." Mr. Wells is irritated by the classical scholars' tees throughout the Kingdom. We are talk about the untranslatable subtleties of Greek and Latin literature, and crushes it with a triumphant argument: "The fact that they fail to bring the treasure given. over into English is the last most fatal flaw in their dery flawed case!" wonder whether the new science is going to lead us all into that Country of the Blind of which Mr. Wells wrote in days when he had more imagination and, perhaps, less intellectual arrogance. older science was, at least, more humble. The Home Secretary informed a deputation, headed by Mr. Dillon, yesterday that the abandonment of the Summer Time Act so far as Ireland is concerned would need a new Act of Parliament. MINING IN IRELAND. It is understood that the Government in-tends to provide six millions for similar purposes in England, including augmentation of the pay of the teachers; and Mr. Samuels and his colleagues hold that for primary and secondary teachers such augmentation is even more imperative in Ireland. They also intend to urge that the recent grant of £40,000 in respect of the salaries of secondary lay teachers shall be bestowed only on the persons for whom it was intended it was intended.

when the Bill became law, and that probably 100,000 of them would now be found fit for some kind of military service.

Mr. Hogge found a certain measure of support for his amendment calling upon the Government to provide pensions for all Army men discharged from the service on account of disabilities not caused by their own misconduct. Mr. Asquith made a short speech more in the form of interrogatives than as a reasoned criticism of the Government's proposals. He asked for an assurance that no substantial part of the 100,000 men now being sought for would be taken from munitions, agriculture, or other forms of National Service.

The debate, generally speaking, was rather directed to details than the broad principles of the Bill; but a wider issue was raised by Mr. Churchill, who asked the Government whether it had really considered the alternative of raising the military age to forty-three, and thereby securing men in full physical efficiency. The Bill, he said, really raised the whole problem of the man-power of the country, and it was time the Mr. DUKE, replying to Mr. Nurset, and the propose to go into anything of the kind.

The debate, generally speaking, was rather directed to details than the broad principles of the Bill; but a wider issue was raised by Mr. Churchill, who asked the Government whether it had really considered the alternative of raising the military age to forty-three, and thereby securing men in full physical efficiency. The Bill, he said, really raised the whole problem of the man-power of the country problem of the man-power of the country, and it was time the House had a serious discussion upon this topic as well as upon the vital question of tonnage. Had the Government any real objection to holding a secret Session for the discussion of these subjects?

Mr. Bonar Law at once rose and said Mr. Bonar Law at once rose and said that, if the House really desired a secret Session, the Government would not be disposed to refuse one; but it was obvious that, even in secret Session, the full reasons which had influenced them in beinging in the Bill could not be made. reasons which had influenced them in bringing in the Bill could not be made known. In regard to the pension question, he thought that a case had been made out, and he promised that the Government would consider the advisability of setting up an independent tribunal to decide whether a man discharged from the Army was entitled to charged from the Army was entitled to pension or to a gratuity. Mr. Hogge thereupon withdrew his amendment, but a division was challenged on the second reading of the Bill, which was carried by

The position of Enver Pasha at this momen must be one of the utmost delicacy. He is trying to have the Turkish troops brought back from the service of the Central Powers, while news comes of another great British victory in Syria, with the capture of many prisoners, the General Commanding, and the whole Divisional Staff. Sir M. LEVY hoped that the medical examination would be made trustworthy.

Sir HENRY DALZIEL hoped that there would be a more definite promise in regard to pensions for unfit men before the bill was passed.

He considered that the Government should show more energy in enlisting friendly aliens, and in getting hold of the young Englishmen who had gone to Ireland and to France, as well as in utilising coloured labour.

Sir JOHN SIMON said that a pledge was given last year that the medically rejected who the be again harried, but that was being done low, while a great many men who bed frauddiently escaped military service were watking about.

EXECUTION OF O'DONNELL.

Lee George O'Donnell, formerly a sergeant in the R.A.M.C., was executed at Winehester Jail yesterday for the murder of Lieutenant Watterton at Aldershot. The prisoner walked firmly to the scaffold, and death was instanceus. Ellis, the executioner, gave a drop of 6tt. Sin. Since his conviction for the orime O'Donnell had been regularly visited by a local Roman Catholic priess, who was present at the execution. The Governor of the jail stated that, as far as he knew, O'Donnell made no confession.

RICHMOND DISTRICT ASYLUM.

SERIOUS FINANCIAL CONDITION.

A summary of the asylum's demands for the past four years showed how the cost had mounted up. In 1914-15 it was £113,076; 1915-16, £119,611; 1916-17, £123,789; 1917-18, £143,620. Increase in three years in amount demanded for support of establishment, £30,544. This increase was apread over the County Borough of Dublin and the Counties of Dublin, Wicklow, and Louth in the following proportions:—City of Dublin, 61 per cent.; County of Dublin, 20 per cent.; County Wicklow, 0 per cent.; County Louth, 10 per cent.

LONDON MONEY MARKET. Bank Rate (changed January 18th, 1917) 51 p.c. General conditions in the Money Market showed no abatement of ease. Call money offered at 5 to 4 per cent, and the accent was more upon the lower iggues than on Wednesday. There was no change in the charge for weekly idans at 4½ to 4½ per cent. The Bank return showing had little influence, the loss of nearly half a million in the reserve being offset by the moderate increase in market funds at the Bank. There were no important movements in calls and dividend "ayments. The Discount Market did not lose its waiting attitude. The posted quotation for two to six months' Bank drafts was 4½ per cent. and for second-hand February bills 4½ to 4½ per cent. It is curious that, while the latter quotation shows a forward tendency, estimates of the average rates for to-day's Treasury bill operation are around 4½ per cent. for the three and six months' bills, and above 4½ per cent, for the yearlies. There was no change in the New York exchange at 4.76½. Oil Shares QUIET.

Oil Shares were quiet, but firmer, with moderate support for the leading counters. The Egyptian group was helped by the fresh victory of the Egyptian Army over till Turks. Shells rose in to 52, but Royal Dutch Shares, at 44, were 4 down, Anglo-Egyptian B Shares were irrn at 11. Mexican Eagle Pref. hardenod slightly. Venezuelans, at 1 m. were in to the good.
